

Winter is an ideal time to step back and decide where your time and budget will make the biggest difference.

1. Review the year just gone- Look through any photos you took in spring and summer.- Make a quick list: what worked well, what was disappointing, what felt like hard work.- Note any recurring problems: shade, waterlogging, privacy, clutter, lack of seating.
2. Prioritise by impact, not just cost- Tidy, healthy lawns and hedges often transform how a garden feels day to day.- Improving one key area (for example, a seating terrace) can be better than doing lots of small bits everywhere.- Consider ongoing maintenance when choosing projects.
3. Decide what you can do yourself- Simple tasks: basic weeding, mulching, light pruning, painting small timberwork.- Jobs to consider delegating: major pruning, drainage, full lawn renovation, large hedge reductions.
4. When a design or planning consultation helps- If you feel stuck or keep changing your mind.- If the garden has several issues at once (levels, drainage, planting, access).- If you're budgeting for a bigger project and want a phased, realistic roadmap.

We offer both online and on-site consultations and can help you prioritise a sensible sequence of improvements for the year ahead.
